1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 1-17 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over applicants' acknowledged state of the art or the Japanese patent document 11-192671 in view of Felter et al. The primary references disclose the invention substantially as claimed; see page 3, lines 15-26 of the instant specification and the abstract of 11-192671. However they do not disclose the use of a protective layer, the claimed properties of the various layers or the specific materials for the various layers. The secondary reference discloses placing a surface protective layer having decorative features associated therewith on a laminate to provide a decorative effect; see column 3, lines 54-58 and column 4, lines 63-67. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to apply a protective layer such as taught in the secondary reference on the articles of the primary references to provide wear resistance and a decorative effect to the laminates. It would also have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to vary such properties as overall product thickness, etc. and the particular materials used for the various layers to produce an article with optimum properties for a particular end use. The secondary reference also suggests laminating additional layers to the article to provide other properties such as resiliency. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to laminate additional layers, such as bonding enhancing layers, to the articles of the primary references depending on the end use of the articles.
